C. Build wind towers closer to the area that will be receiving the energy
(Statement of the nature of the objection(s))

My understanding is - Chicago will still have electricity if this line isn't built. The East Coast has wind energy to exploit. If this is true - They should be building the wind turbines that they need in those areas.

Also, if the other Eastern states get on board with wind energy in the near future (which I feel confident they will) and RICL goes broke because of their energy would then be to expensive, the damage to our states' landscape, farm ground and timbers will be all for nothing. Plus the landscape will never be the same as it was. There will be unused towers standing throughout the state.

It still comes down to what I think the current guidelines are: No private company should have the right to take land from the states citizens when the citizens will not benefit.

Thank you

D. More research needs to be done to find sources in other states closer to the area that is going to receive the energy rather than trying to transport power across states. In this case - Iowa
